Correctness From P. 11

committee like then-Senator Nancy Greene-Raine arranged in 2011. Then, unlike 2011 when the Stephen Harper Conservative government said nothing about Senator Greene-Raine's hearing, publicize it broadly.

Next, conservative parties need to coordinate honest public opinion polling, asking neutral questions such as:

"Do you think that we are in the midst of a climate crisis so severe that it is worth restructuring our entire energy infrastructure in an attempt 'to protect the climate'?"

"How much would you personally be prepared to pay per month so that Canada 'will lead the world' in its attempts to, quote, stop climate change, unquote?"

Then broadly publicize the results of these polls.

In perhaps half a year, following all the above: call for the Trudeau government to convene open, unbiased, public hearings into the science of climate change, with experts on all sides of the issue invited to testify. When the government refuses to hold such hearings, ask, in the House of Commons and in public, questions such as: What is Trudeau hiding? Why will the Liberals only allow Canadians to hear the views of experts who agree with them?

In perhaps a year, or maybe after forming government, in the case of the federal conservatives, directly convene open, unbiased public hearings into the science of climate change, with experts on all sides of the issue invited to testify and the publicize the testimonies widely.

Premier Smith should convene such hearings right away before the next election gets close.

After the above, announce, that, "considering the gross uncertainties in the field and disagreements between leading experts, as illustrated in the above hearings, the government will henceforth focus, not on mitigation but, on adaptation and building resilience to climate change. Only when, or if, the science solidifies behind the dangerous human-caused climate change hypothesis will the government consider funding any mitigation projects."

Many well-meaning, skilled and intelligent people get into politics because they genuinely want to improve their nation for the sake of their children and grandchildren. But, because of the pressures of political correctness and the necessity of getting elected if they are really to bring about change, many lose their way after attaining power and end of supporting positions they know are wrong. Whether they follow the specific approach I am recommending or not, they really owe it to their descendants and indeed all Canadians to develop and carry out a comprehensive plan to kill the climate scare before it destroys the societies past generations fought to build and defend.
