

Peter Dyck who lives at Amisk unties this very skittish Gruella mare while he does ranching chores for a relative, Ardine Anholt. Dyck is shown at 10:50 a.m. while on his brother-in-law's farm that butts up against the village. ©PROVOST NEWS PHOTO.

“This time, I'm going to get paid for working slow.” That's the contention of Peter Kirchmeir who already has two careers under his belt and now is learning about archeology at a new—and very large bison and native artifact dig south and west of Bodo along with a dozen students who are easily young enough to be his children. The Edmonton man has retired as an assistant technical director at the University of Alberta drama department—and he also taught drama and history at the university. Kirchmeir is shown at 5:20 p.m. comparing notes and ideas with his fellow students at the end of a long day in the hot Alberta sun. ©PROVOST NEWS PHOTO.

Randy Sheppard, 41 (left) operates a variety of controls while fellow-Edmonton rig worker, 21 year old Shaun Pederson moves heavy equipment around the floor of this drilling rig during a morning shift. Meanwhile 19 year old Josh Baranowski (far right) of Roblin, Manitoba contributes to cleaning the hole before another stage of drilling is attempted.

©PROVOST NEWS PHOTO.